

“ These things happen.
It was an accident.
It’s part of getting old. ”

These are the typical responses family members hear when they ask what caused a loved one to die in a nursing home. But they are generally not valid explanations when a resident who is under professional nursing care dies from a fall, fracture, or bedsores.

Bedsores and Falls Are Not Normal

Bedsores and fractures from falls are two of the most common injuries caused by neglect. These injuries are often hidden or unnoticed by family until it’s too late, and you don’t always get the whole story from the facility. If neglect contributed to your loved one’s death, those responsible must be held accountable so another tragedy can be prevented.
